

Health First Colorado (Colorado’s Medicaid Program) and Public Charge

April 2023

There are some important changes to Health First Colorado and the public charge rule. You can now use most public benefits, including Health First Colorado and Child Health Plan Plus (CHP+) and it will not harm your immigration status.

What is Public Charge?

- The public charge test decides if a person might use government services in the future. The test includes your age, income, health, education/skills, and your sponsor’s affidavit.
- Some people must pass a public charge test when they apply for a green card (lawful permanent residence) or a visa to enter the United States.

Does Public Charge Rule Affect Me?

- Using most public benefits is not considered in a public charge test (Table 1).
- Applying for any public benefits is not considered in a public charge test.
- Benefits used by family members are not considered in your public charge test.
- The public charge rule does not apply to all immigration statuses (Table 2).

Table 2: Immigration Status and Public Charge

U.S. citizens	Public charge rule does NOT affect you.
Temporary Protected Status (TPS), U or T visa, Asylum, Refugee, or Special Immigrant Juvenile Status
Lawful Permanent Residents/Green Card Holders	Public charge rule does NOT affect you. Consult a legal expert if you plan to leave the U.S. for over 180 days.
People applying for a green card or visa from inside the U.S.	Public charge rule MAY affect you. Only the use of very few government programs (listed above) will be considered in the application, along with other factors like income.
People applying for a green card or visa from outside the U.S.

Contact a legal expert or a trusted community organization if you are concerned about the public charge rule.

How Has the Public Charge Rule Changed?

- The public charge rule changed in December 2022 and limited the benefits considered in a public charge test.
- The new policy does not change eligibility rules for public benefits programs.

Will my Information Be Shared?

Information you provide on an application is confidential and cannot be shared with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. Colorado law protects your personal information when applying for or enrolling in most public benefits. Your information may only be shared with some federal agencies if there is an audit from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services and the Office of the Inspector General. If shared, the information does not impact your immigration status and can't be used in a public charge determination.
